Soju

Korea's national spirit and the most widely drunk spirit in the world: no visit to Bibimbap is complete without Soju!

How to order?

"Soju han-byung joo-sae-yo"

Order your Soju by the bottle from the server and we recommend a Hite to go with it - just like you would on the streets of Seoul.

How to open the bottle?

Surprise, surprise! There's a ritual to opening a bottle of soju. You should first give the bottle a good swirl. Doing this should send a wee bubbly tornado through the bottle, whose wispy purpose isn't rightly known. You should then bash the bottle's base against your elbow and then crack it open.

Serving Soju?

An older member of the group will most likely hand you a shot glass. You should always accept a glass with two hands. In Korea, it is a showing of respect to accept anything from a person of seniority with both hands. They will pour the shot for you.

Drinking Soju?

When you drink, turn your head to the side and avoid eye contact with the person that poured it for you.

For the first drink, you should shoot it. You might find that everyone is shooting every drink (such is the Korean way), but it's okay for you to sip your soju if you want to, but the first one should be dropped in one shot.

When your glass is empty, hand it back to the person that poured a drink for you and pour them a shot. This will start a series of glass and bottle passes around the table. The first shot follows a strict ritual. After that it's relatively simple. If you see an empty glass, offer to fill it.
